Summary:

The Blind Side is a book by Michael Lewis that tells the story of Michael Oher, a homeless African-American teenager who is taken in by a wealthy white family, the Tuohys, and becomes an All-American football player. The book follows Oher's journey from his impoverished upbringing in Memphis, Tennessee, to his eventual success as an offensive lineman in the NFL. The book also examines the role of football in American culture, and the role of race in the sport.

The book begins with a description of Oher's childhood, growing up in a broken home with an absent father and a drug-addicted mother. He is taken in by a family friend, but eventually ends up living on the streets. He is eventually taken in by the Tuohys, a wealthy white family who live in a gated community in Memphis. The Tuohys provide Oher with a stable home and the opportunity to attend a private school, Briarcrest Christian School.

At Briarcrest, Oher is introduced to football and quickly excels at the sport. He is eventually recruited by the University of Mississippi, where he becomes an All-American offensive lineman. The book follows Oher's journey from his humble beginnings to his eventual success in the NFL. Along the way, Lewis examines the role of football in American culture, and the role of race in the sport.

The book also looks at the role of the Tuohys in Oher's life. They provide him with a stable home and the opportunity to succeed, but also face criticism from their community for taking in a black teenager. The book examines the dynamics of race and class in America, and how they can both help and hinder a person's success.

The Blind Side is an inspiring story of a young man's journey from poverty to success. It is also a thought-provoking examination of race and class in America, and the role of football in our culture. It is a must-read for anyone interested in sports, race, or the American Dream.
